

ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

Humans are often exposed to a mixture of environmental pollutants emitted by. These pollutants can affect different organs in the body in various ways, leading to harmful health effects. Environmental toxicology covers harmful chemical, biological, and physical agents affecting living organisms and humans. Environmental pollution has become a major global problem, harming ecosystems and threatening human health. Around the world, air pollution alone causes millions of premature deaths each year. According to the World Health Organization, it is mainly linked to lung cancer, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, asthma, stroke, heart failure, and respiratory infections. The main contribution of conference will be providing scientific basis and evidence to help policy makers and the public to prevent serious environmental damage and protect human health from environmental risks.

SUB-THEMES

- Environmental toxicity and Indian knowledge system (IGS)
- Chemical & industrial pollutants
- Agricultural pesticide related hazards
- Airborne hazards
- Water & marine pollutants
- Emerging biological and nano hazards
- Climate & geophysical hazards
- Toxicity & risk assessment
- Waste management
- Multi organ toxicity
- Environmental pollutants and their toxicity
- Impact of toxicity on society
- Environmental laws and regulations
